INTRODUCTION

The purpose of granting the status of the “state language” to the Uzbek language is to restore the social status of the Uzbek language in the life of our republic, further expand its scope of application and consistently establish its study.

After all, it will be possible to achieve this goal by deeply studying the language of written literature, which has embodied the richness of our people's language and passed down from generation to generation, on the basis of which it will be possible to consistently bolster the way a particular word artist uses words, his skills.

Language plays a very kata role in fiction. Uzbek writers made valuable comments about the decisive role of language in the work of art and the fact that the language of the century should be beautiful and harmonious.

For example, Abdulla Kadiri attached great importance to the language and its artistic and aesthetic and social role, and demanded from young pencilers: "from every word that comes to memory, sentences are not considered woven phases. Word-mold, let the thought be a brick laid in it, ripe from many jug, lay the foundation for a new life porch..."

The lexicon of the works of Abdulla Kadiri is rich and colorful. A large part of them is made up of an onomastic layer. In the linguistics of the later period, onomastic units are approached in different aspects. One of them is the onomastic code theory in linguoculturology. According to this view, names, in particular names in a work of art, are not only a unit of language, but also an ethnomathetic information carrier element of a culture considered a secondary semiotic System [1:273].

Before researching such important aspects, a significant factor is the statistical analysis of the onomastic units of Kadiri's work "Days gone by". Therefore, we tried to statistically analyze the onomastic units in the work on an alphabetical basis in the tables below.
