

The development of the linguocultural competence of students in teaching the English language

Gulchekhra Sh.Khazratova

Senior teacher, Tashkent Medical Academy, Uzbekistan

Received: 24 December 2024; Accepted: 26 January 2025; Published: 28 February 2025

Abstract: The article deals with the concept of “linguocultural competence” in teaching English. In modern studies on methods of teaching English language increasing attention is focused on the relation between language, history and culture. The acknowledgement of the importance of the cultural component in research is closely connected with the use of cognitive approach.

Keywords: Linguocultural competence; history of the English language; globalization; intercultural communication.

Introduction: The recent rapid pace of globalization and significant changes in different connections that exist between nations and people has again emphasized the importance of learning English. The increasingly worldwide use of English raises a number of linguistic, cultural and pedagogical issues that can be linked with students’ understanding of the English language itself.

One of the most important aims of English teachers is to prepare linguistically competent specialists who will be able to socialize in multicultural communities and apply their knowledge in different spheres of life. Competence-based approach to education today is one of the significant issues. A variety of key competences (linguistic, social, cultural and communicative) is essential for everyone, which will ensure the successful adaption and self-realization of a young specialist in the modern fast changing world.

It is quite evident that many graduates of universities demonstrate not appropriate level of the English language and even those who are knowledgeable enough cannot use effectively the language in their professional communication. More than that it is becoming worse because some students lack some basic knowledge concerning the laws of the development of the language, etymological characteristics of many words. Sometimes they fail to comment upon some linguistic phenomena, because they are not aware of linguocultural aspects of the English language, customs, traditions and ways of life of different nations. Any foreign language should be viewed not only as a system of linguistic norms, but also as a system of social norms and behavior, spiritual values. It has long been recognized that any living language develops together with the speech community, that is, with the people who speak it.

Language is central to historical and social interaction in every society, regardless of location and time period. Presumably the history of the English language is one of the major subjects while learning English.

Content, basic concepts

Linguoculturology is a new branch of science, which deals with manifestations of culture of different nations, which became fixed and are reflected in the language. This relatively new field of linguistic research represents a merger of two distinct subdisciplines of linguistics: sociolinguistics and culturology. The great upsurge of interest in culturology and its actual rise from the state of amateur speculation to a serious science date from the late 20th century. Researches in this field use sociolinguistic methods to explain various language phenomena. This approach is particularly useful when language internal data alone is unable to account for some seemingly inexplicable facts. Linguoculturology is aimed at scrutinizing linguistic units in connection with historical and social development of the country at different periods and thus ensures general broad comprehension of the language as a complex system. Byram thinks that when people are talking to each other their social identities are unavoidably part of the social interaction between them. In language teaching the concept of "communicative competence" takes this into account by emphasizing that language learners need to acquire not just grammatical competence but also the knowledge of what is "appropriate" language (2002).

Linguoculturological approach in teaching English focuses on the semantic concept. Through this angle the process of learning the English language implies not only traditional study of phonetics, grammar, and vocabulary but also the English language mastering through its national concepts. This enables the learners to acquire interrelated ethnocultural knowledge of language, culture and history, resulting in formation of linguacultural competence, which is a set of special skills necessary to use in practice. In Dictionary of English Language and Culture it is defined as ability to do what is needed (2005). It means that a student should be able to develop an ability to recognize and connect a semantic content of a language symbol with associative motivation of choice of a word. In a number of works of Russian scientists the concept "competency" is defined as intellectual and personal ability of an individual to practical activities, and "competence" as content's component of the given ability in the form of knowledge, skills and aptitudes (Zimnyaya, 2003). In Zimnyaya's opinion competency always displays the actual competence (2003).

Linguacultural has to deal with lots of issues related to the language, such as the role of culture in formation of linguistic concepts, connection between the linguistic symbol and cultural sense of the word. It is essential to identify cultural semantics which can be obtained from the interaction of two different fields - language and culture. Language and culture interactions have a reciprocal relationship: language shapes cultural interactions and cultural interactions shape language. It should be noted that the relationship of language to culture involves many difficult and contradictory problems. One problem may occur when cultural information of linguistic items mainly acquires some implication, which is hidden. A well-known expression "French leave" means 'leave of absence without permission'. Originally it was used as a term describing a custom, prevalent in France in the 18th century but regarded in England as impolite, of leaving a social function without saying farewell to one's host or hostess. It is now used of any unauthorized absence or departure, from one's place of work. From this example it is evident that only knowing the origin of the linguistic item students will be able to fully understand the meaning of it and use it in the language properly. Moreover, sometimes the meanings of some words can change in course of time.

Not only language and culture, but also language and history are undivided. The evolution of language includes many facts which pertain to the functioning of language in the speech community. The most widely accepted classification of factors relevant to language divides them into extra linguistic and linguistic. Strictly speaking, the term "extra-linguistic" embraces a variety of conditions bearing upon different aspects of human life, for instance, the psychological or the physiological aspects. In the first place, however, extra linguistic factors include events in the history of the people relevant to the development of the language, such as the structure of society, expansion over geographical areas, migrations, mixtures and separation of tribes, political and economic unity or disunity, contacts with other people, the progress of culture and literature. All these aspects of external history determine the linguistic situation and affect the evolution of the language. In the fifth and sixth centuries the Germanic invaders came and settled in Britain from the north-western coastline of continental Europe. As well as any other notable historic event the Anglo-Saxon migrations could not but leave their linguistic reflection on the language. At the time of the conquest the Anglo-Saxons were still pagans. Linguistic evidence of Anglo-Saxon paganism is provided by names of legendary heroes, Anglo-Saxon kings and chieftains, poets of the past. It was a custom with the pagans to give men names of animals, trees and other objects of nature. Such are the names Hengiest and Horsa (both mean "horse"), Ethelstan (precious stone), Cynewulf (leader of wolves). So, knowledge of history, culture and way of life of people can throw light on some linguistic units.

Basic features of the development of linguocultural competence

A historical approach to the phenomena of the modern language can provide students with proper understanding and use. The understanding of the laws of the development of language, the ability to explain some facts knowing the history of the language and history of the people will contribute to scientific understanding of the rules of modern English language. That is why the history of the English language course is of great importance for students. The main tasks of this course are:

- to uncover laws governing the development of language as a specific system, i.e. such development is carried out in which the full development and interdependence of individual elements of the structure of language - phonetic, grammatical and lexical;

- to consider the relationship that exists between the history of the English people and the history of the English language. This relationship can be seen most clearly in various facts of development of the vocabulary of the English language;
- to develop the students' ability to observe certain linguistic phenomena and to establish historical links between them. It is important for students as in their future activities they must be able to scientifically justify a particular linguistic phenomenon and explain it properly;
- to introduce students to certain factual material on the history of phonetics, grammar and vocabulary of the English language that will provide the basis for the development of the scientific outlook on the evolution of the language.

Tracing the history of the English language in different periods, using the actual material students make sure that language is the product of a number of different periods of its development. That modern English is the result of a long and gradual development of linguistic phenomena of the previous centuries. It is particularly important because is that many of the phenomena that seem "deviations" or "wrong" in terms of the language, can actually represent the remnants of ancient laws and can be explained historically. For example, such phenomena of modern English as "wrong" plurals type man-men, foot-feet, so-called non-standard forms of verbs and much more, can be explained scientifically, and, therefore, be understood only by means of knowledge of the history of English language, which, therefore, is key to understanding the structure of a modern language.

RESULTS

Integration processes in the modern global economic and cultural space, highlight the intercultural communication as the most important factor of integration of human society. The problem of creating the conditions for teaching intercultural communication enhances motivation to learn a foreign language and the development of students' linguoculturological competence acquires special importance. In these circumstances the importance of learning the history of the English language is becoming more important.

The development of linguocultural competence of students is aimed at the realization by students of their own national or social origin, place and role of national culture, the history of the target language, traditions and customs, and spiritual values of the people in the world cultural treasure, the ability to represent their country. Special course is aimed at educating of humanistic values; it involves students into linguocultural studies and research. Linguocultural competence provides students with the ability to express their views in writing and orally in a foreign language, understand and discuss features of culture, socio-economic life of the target language, to conduct exploratory work, prepare an oral report on a selected topic. Foreign language as a subject accumulates the most complete history and common cultural values of humanity, systematically transmits them to students. It helps to create a real opportunity for familiarizing students with universal spiritual and moral values, world and national culture for understanding the problems and realities of the modern world; contributes to the formation of national identity, citizenship, humanism, tolerance, and respect for national and world culture.

Doing experimental work promotes formation of intercultural communicative competence, communication culture. Diagnostic tests were used to trace the effectiveness of experimental work on the formation of experimental linguoculturological competence of students.

The results of the tests of the experiment revealed the following dynamics:

- students master their own cultural values and culture study;
- students assess norms of interpersonal communication;
- students do practical actions in terms of intercultural communication.

Results of the study suggest the following conclusions:

1 Problem of intercultural learning in modern educational process in the field of learning English language history becomes one of the highest priorities of values and goals of education.

2 Linguoculturological competence is formed on the basis of more than two languages and cultures: native and non-native. The study of national culture is a basis for the formation of linguoculturological competence.

3 Psychological and pedagogical conditions of formation of linguoculturological competence of students are based on the principles of student-centered pedagogy.

4 Knowledge of language has significant educational force to influence the formation of linguoculturological competence.

CONCLUSION

In accordance with the results the necessity to change requirements for students can be traced. Culture is seen as an essential characteristic of a person associated with the human capacity. Communication is an essential part of human life, and therefore part of the culture. Under cross-cultural competence, we understand the student's psychological readiness to communicate (interest, motive, and lack of fear of the language barrier) and a certain level of verbal skills, language material, and most importantly - the necessary amount of sociocultural knowledge of the spoken language. The main areas of competence are cognitive, pragmatic and motivational. Cognitive goal is to obtain information about other cultures, and the need to refer not only to the culture of the country of the target language but also the culture of other countries.

REFERENCES

Byram M., Gribkova B., Starkey H., (2002). Developing the Intercultural Dimension in Language Teaching. A Practical Introduction for Teachers. Language Policy Division. Directorate of School, Out – of – school and Higher Education. DGIV Council of Europe, Strasbourg: 7 Procedia – Social and Behavioral Sciences, Vol.112:532-537.

Baker, W. 2022. Intercultural and Transcultural Awareness in Language Teaching. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

Kramsch, C. 1993. Context and Culture in Language Teaching. Oxford: Oxford University Press.

McConachy, T., Golubeva, I., and Wagner, M. 2022. Intercultural Learning in Language Education and Beyond: Evolving Concepts, Perspectives and Practices. Bristol: Multilingual Matters.

Khazratova G.Sh. Intercultural teaching methods of english at higher education establishments, Xorazm mamun Academy axborotnomasi, 2022-11/3