Introduction: Humanity development in history woman of the individual, especially the upbringing of girls place and importance always separately attention with is a matter of approach came. Because, the society spiritual-enlightenment level, cultural environment and moral The image, first of all, of mothers in the form of Motherhood and - love, patience, honesty and of devotion high expression to be, this qualities girl child education in the process step by step is formed.

Uzbek of the people historical-cultural heritage, values and traditions girl the child upbringing to the issue separately approach with to look requirement "The girl" pamper the people to the ground The proverb "don't look at it" is also true. this the truth represents. Because girl child's morality, spirituality and morality – all society development and cultural level criterion This view is from the point of view looking at you, girl child's moral, spiritual, physical and spiritual maturity provision issue not only family, maybe education institutions, neighborhoods and state of the policy priority from directions one as consideration necessary.

Globalization processes intensified current in the era of the internet and digital technologies society of life inseparable to the part around This is a from the side, opportunities expands, the second from the side, young generation, including girls to education various negative taking into account the effects entrance possible. Including public culture currents, social on the networks wrong or broken shown information, parents indifference or enough pedagogical to knowledge has not being as a result girl children's spiritual in the world controversial situations to the surface arrival probability increases.

Therefore, the education of the girl child national values, spiritual inheritance and modern upbringing principles based on organization to be - in the future in society moral stability provision, family of intolerance prevent to take and perfect person adult in delivery important factor as confession to be necessary.

The great thinker Abdurauf Fitrat paid special attention to the role of the mother in raising children. He said:

"Every child is condemned to be raised by his mother from infancy, therefore, we receive our first education from our own mothers. Therefore, let our mothers be educated".

These words are not said in vain. Because a child is like soil, whatever seed you plant in it, it will bear fruit. A child in the hands of a mother is in her hands whether she reaches the top or goes astray. Therefore, a mother should have love in her heart, sweet words on her tongue, and good upbringing in her hands.

Parenting is continuous work. It is not just about taking a stick in your hand and giving advice to a child. Parenting is manifested in every day, in every word, in every action of a parent. Children often act more on what they see than on what they hear. Therefore, parents must always educate themselves.

Good upbringing is the most valuable inheritance a child can receive. It cannot be lost, sold, or worn out. And most importantly, it affects not only your child, but also future generations.

Imam Ghazali emphasizes that “Educating a girl child is educating the future. Because she is a mother, a nurturer, and a teacher”.

This idea means that the upbringing of a girl child is not only the upbringing of one person, but also affects the entire society, even the future generation. A girl child will become a mother tomorrow. And a mother is the first school, the first teacher, the first friend for a child. The first life lessons, manners, kindness, honesty, patience - all this is taught to the child by the mother. Therefore, the upbringing a girl receives, she will pass on to her child in the future. She influences not only her own child, but also the people around her with her morality and decency. For example, her role in warming the family atmosphere, strengthening love among relatives, and being a positive example to her friends is incomparable.

The great Chinese sage Confucius said: “If you want to reform a country, first educate the women of the family”.

Although these words may seem simple, they actually contain a great truth that can change the life of an entire society. According to Confucius, the root of any reform in society lies in the family. Because the family is the smallest but most important stem of society.

Family is not just a few people living in one house. Family is a school of love, respect, decency, and morality. The main teacher of this school is often the mother. Because a child learns the first lessons of life from his mother's language, from his mother's hands, and from his mother's love.

A mother is the fortress of the home, the stronghold of the family. If her soul is bright, then both light and warmth will reign in the family. If the mother is spiritually rich, educated and knowledgeable, the child will also instill these qualities in his heart. Thus, from educated children, an educated generation will emerge, and from an educated generation, a well-groomed society will emerge.

If mothers are spiritually unstable, careless, or illiterate, the environment in that home will also be unstable. This situation, over time, will affect the entire society. Therefore, Confucius's advice to “educate the women of the family first” is the first and most important step in social reform.

Our people also have proverbs with similar meanings: “The mother's home is the key to the house of society”, and “If the mother is educated, the generation will be enlightened”.

The peace of the country, the prosperity of the people, the health of the generation - all this depends on the spiritual atmosphere in the family. Therefore, every mother should consider it her constant duty to educate herself, gain knowledge, and enrich her soul and spirituality.

Because if the family is reformed, the neighborhood will be reformed, and if the neighborhood is reformed, the country will be reformed.

The great Sufi poet and thinker Jalaluddin Rumi said: “A woman is the heart of a nation. A nation with a pure heart has a bright future”.

These words, like a bright lamp, are the truth that illuminates the path of society. Because the heart of a nation is its mothers, daughters, and sisters. If the heart is pure, it will have kindness, honesty, dignity, and upbringing. These qualities, passed down from generation to generation, illuminate the face of the nation.

According to Rumi, the light that shines in a woman's heart is not just any light. It is the trust in a child's eyes, the love in a family, the unity in a neighborhood, the peace and blessing of the entire country. A mother whose heart is filled with light is able to sow the seeds of love, honesty, and justice in her child. And these seeds will brighten the entire society tomorrow.

The fate of the nation is largely in the hands of women. If mothers and daughters are spiritually pure, educated, and respectful, the future of the country will be on the right path. On the contrary, if a woman harbors negligence, spiritual weakness, and bad habits, the steps of society will be unstable.

It is not for nothing that our people say: “The mother's home is the heart of the nation's home”. “If the mother is good, the country will be good”. Because a woman is the hand that rocks the cradle of life, the heart that protects the soul of the nation, and the lamp that shines light on the future. Therefore, every mother, every girl must keep her heart pure, decorate it with knowledge and enlightenment, and fill it with love and decency. Because the light in their hearts will illuminate the entire nation tomorrow.

Raising a girl child is as delicate and demanding as caring for a flower. It is not for nothing that our people say, “Look at the mother, take the daughter”. There is a great truth behind this saying. Because a girl child, first of all, learns from her mother's behavior, her manual labor and craftsmanship, the sweetness of her words and the elegance of her behavior. As the mother is, many aspects of her daughter are shaped.

A girl is the most delicate flower in a family's garden. Her chastity and honor are the honor of the entire family, even the entire neighborhood. That is why our people paid special attention to the upbringing of girls, teaching them from a young age to be neat, eloquent, kind, respectful of elders and respectful of younger ones.

But unfortunately, today there are some shortcomings in the upbringing of girls. Some girls who get married, unable to bear the burden of life, abandon their families like flowers. To prevent this situation, parents have a great responsibility. Because raising a girl child not only to be educated, but also patient, resilient, and ready for the bitter and sweet of life is the greatest task for parents.

A girl is not just a child in a family, she is the mother of the future generation, the flower-like decoration of the house, a being that awakens the most delicate aspects of the soul. Her appearance, behavior, speech, even a glance at her, traces of home upbringing and the heritage of her grandparents are visible. That is why the demands placed on the girl child in our people have always been beyond measure.

A girl is more delicate than a flower in her tenderness, more delicate than the moon in her chastity, and more delicate than the first spring breeze in her prayer. She must be patient, wise, and kind. Her heart must be filled with love, her tongue with sweet words, and her steps with the shadow of honor.

Every parent should know that the standards set for a girl child are never average: either at the top or at the bottom. Her single behavior can either shine a light or cast a shadow on the entire family. That is why in some cases, a simple mistake can be forgiven for a boy, but when it comes to a girl, the popular verdict is harsh:

“If a boy did this, it would be a different story. But she is a girl!”

This statement embodies the bittersweet experiences of life, thousands of years of traditions, and the whole weight of a sense of honor. Because a girl's name, body, spirituality, and behavior have always been evaluated in a special way. Even if her foot deviates slightly, inattention or a momentary carelessness can leave a stain on her whole life.

Therefore, parents should set an example in raising their daughters not only with advice, but also with their own lives and behavior. Because a girl is like a flower - if you take care of her, she will fill the house with fragrance; if you ignore her, she will grow thorns.

CONCLUSION

The upbringing of girls is one of the most important educational processes that lays the foundation for the future of society. After all, today's enlightened, patriotic, kind and patient girl will be tomorrow's selfless mother, support of the family, and active member of society. Therefore, the upbringing of girls should be the focus not only of the family, but also of the school, the neighborhood, and the wider community.

The upbringing of girls has long been one of the main factors strengthening the spiritual foundation of the nation. The traditions, customs and values of the people of Uzbekistan have served for centuries to raise girls as noble, chaste, and patriotic. It is necessary to preserve this rich heritage and enrich it with a new approach, in harmony with the requirements of today. The attitude towards the girl child is the attitude towards society. Therefore, every family, every teacher must deeply understand the responsibility in this regard.

Modern pedagogical and psychological research shows that a girl needs an environment of love, attention, and social support for her full development as a person. Her feelings, hopes, and worldview are shaped by family upbringing. Therefore, it is important to find a balance in upbringing between firmness and gentleness, and between gentleness and demandingness.

In today's era of globalization, it is necessary to raise our girls to be conscious, educated, and independent thinkers in order to protect them from foreign ideas and prejudices. The book shows how the education system, the neighborhood, and the family can work together to shape the ideal image of a woman. A girl is the spiritual standard of the future society, and therefore the education she receives is the key to the future of the nation.
